Commentary

South African equities delivered a robust performance in February, with the JSE All Share Index climbing an impressive 7% in rand terms. This surge was largely driven by resource counters, which advanced nearly 13% for the month. The strong gains in the resources sector reflected elevated global commodity prices and a sustained appetite for risk in emerging markets. In comparison, the MSCI EM Index returned 5.7%, demonstrating continued investor interest in higher-growth regions, while developed market equities lagged behind, with the MSCI World Index slipping slightly in rand terms. Locally, fixed income markets also demonstrated resilience, with the All Bond Index (ALBI) posting a solid 1.7% gain. This was supported by stable inflation expectations as well as encouraging signals from the recent Budget, which pointed to a more constructive fiscal outlook and prudent expenditure management. Financials and industrials delivered more mixed results during the month. Banks benefitted from resilient credit conditions, robust capital positions, and attractive valuations, which helped to offset some of the broader economic headwinds. However, consumer-facing sectors remained under pressure as households continued to grapple with weak balance sheets and elevated borrowing costs. February was also marked by heightened political attention as South Africa moved deeper into the pre-election period. Market participants remained focused on the evolving coalition landscape and the potential implications for fiscal consolidation, state-owned enterprise reform, and energy policy. Investors closely monitored political developments, seeking clarity on future policy direction and the prospects for further economic reform. While a degree of uncertainty persisted, the market responded positively to indications of a continued commitment to expenditure restraint and improved revenue collection, which are seen as vital for maintaining fiscal sustainability and supporting investor confidence. Globally, sentiment was influenced by shifting expectations regarding interest rate cuts in the US and Europe. Softer inflation prints in major economies bolstered the case for monetary easing later in the year, which provided support for emerging markets as global capital flows sought higher returns. Commodity markets were buoyed by renewed infrastructure investment in China, along with supply disruptions in key metals, which underpinned the strong performance of South African resource shares. Developed market equities underperformed in rand terms as the currency stabilised and investors rotated toward more attractively valued emerging markets. This divergence reinforced the relative appeal of emerging markets for South African investors seeking to diversify offshore. The combination of robust resource sector earnings, a more positive fiscal environment, and a supportive global backdrop positions South African assets favourably heading into March. Nevertheless, political uncertainty, fragile domestic growth, and global macroeconomic volatility remain important risks to monitor. For investors, maintaining a diversified approach across local equities, bonds, and selective offshore exposure continues to be a prudent strategy for navigating these complex dynamics.
